Late Summer Newsletter – August 2010

DAFFODILS FOR DEEP SOUTH GARDENS

Growing daffodils in the south is sometimes a challenge. We have hot weather now until November. That puts our planting season much later than most of the other regions. We also have very spasmodic type weather. The first of January can be fairly nice and then get really cold, maybe snow or even worse – ice. This past year I did not have a bloom until the first of March. The previous year I had some blooming the end of January.

So what daffodils do well in this area (edge of Zone 7-9)? I did a poll of several people from the Georgia Daffodil Society (John Lipscomb – north of Atlanta, Sara Van Beck – Mid-town Atlanta, Bonnie Campbell – 25 miles south of Atlanta, Jaydee Ager – Central Georgia, and Paula Karrh – South Georgia

John's comments concerning the daffodils he listed were, "they survive no matter what the climate throws at them—they keep multiplying and blooming despite neglect". Jaydee's comment on Golden Dawn 8 Y-O, one of the ones she listed, was that it has been the longest lasting daffodil to survive with her through five moves around the area. Paula Karrh's list, like John's, is made up of daffodils she has had for over 30 years and they are still doing well. She also listed a few newer ones she has just started growing in the last four years. So far so good!

Comments from Sara Van Beck:

There are a few quick rules of thumb that apply across all the divisions: Whites, pinks and any flower that is later than "Midseason" requires afternoon shade. Pinks and whites are somewhat heavier feeders.

Yellows want full sun. Division 2 and 11 can be very robust plants. Jonquils want a hot, dry summer; cyclamineus flowers want a cooler, damper summer spot. Tazettas want full sun, and a hot dry summer. N. x medioluteus, aka "Twin Sisters", is about the most shade-tolerant daffodil of the lot. Bulbocodiums like a dry, cooler spot for the summer, in a sandier soil – a dry spot under a tree in the roots seems to suit them. Triandrus are similar – good drainage but not a hot summer spot. Actaea is the strongest of all the poets, but still will not thrive/survive in old Zone 8. Division 3 flowers, being later bloomers, need afternoon shade; the earlier blooming Queen of the North will bloom in the Coastal South while Polar Ice, like Actaea, will not. And, species daffodils can root much sooner than hybrids, so consider planting them in October. This also holds for the Coastal South – flowers there bloom sooner (January-February), so you need to plant in October.

You can also find Sara Van Beck's article "Growing Poets in the Deep South" in the June 2008 issue of THE DAFFODIL JOURNAL on page 284.
