CULTURAL DIRECTIONS FOR DAFFODILS

To obtain best results, a sunny well drained plot of ground should be selected. Previous deep digging to aerate the soil is an advantage, but on no account should farm or stable manure be incorporated or used as a mulch. The use of inorganic fertilisers is not recommended, but a light dusting of bone meal before planting and during each successive winter will help bulb and flower production. The rate of application need not exceed 4 ozs. per square yard. Wood ashes or a sprinkling of sulphate of potash will help to produce intensity of colour.

The site should be made up some weeks before planting, which should be carried out in September. The bulbs should be covered with about twice their own depth of soil in average land, and rather less if the ground is heavy.

We recommend planting in beds about four feet wide with paths of 18 to 24 inches between beds. The bulbs are planted about eight bulbs to the row if of full size, and the rows should be sufficiently far apart to enable the space between rows to be hoed during the growing season. The elimination of weeds is important if flowers of show quality are required.

Smaller quantities of bulbs can be planted in blocks or groups in herbaceous borders, but cannot be expected to produce their best blooms if planted close to hedges, or shrubs whose roots rob the soil of its productive qualities. Nor can bulbs planted in dry, parched conditions be expected to increase well, or produce large flowers after the first year.

The daffodil requires a damp retentive soil during the period when it is making the bulb which will flower in the following season. Bulbs may be left down for several seasons without being lifted, and we have good clumps which have been down for six years or more, but we now lift all commercial stocks annually and select the largest bulbs for sale.

The large round bulb with a single nose, or a large offset will produce a finer flower than a mother bulb with several noses. After flowering seed pods may develop, and the flower heads must be removed or the development of the bulbs will be prejudiced.

Not all daffodils will produce their best flowers if grown in pots, but most white trumpets, or white and red flowers do well. On the other hand yellow and reds do not come well in pots with certain exceptions, among which GAUCHO and RIALTO are notable and these varieties can be really fine, grown in this manner. The secret of successful pot cultivation is ample watering, good ventilation and a moist atmosphere being maintained by overhead spraying, or floor watering as the buds come into flower.

We do not recommend forcing daffodils in pots, and the best practice is to plunge the pots in cool ground (under 48°F), for eight weeks at least, and to bring the pots into the greenhouse or house using no heat except to keep away frost. Bring the pots into room temperature only when flower buds are showing. Copious watering is essential once the buds are coming clear of the bulbs, and on no account should the pots be allowed to get dry.

Certain red-cupped varieties when grown in the open fade quickly or the cups get burned by strong sunlight. We grow these in half shade, and cut them before they have developed fully. Some of these have exceptional colour in the cup, and MERLIN and MATAPAN are in this category.

Daffodils which are cut and stood in water up to their necks for 12 hours in a dark or shady room will outlast those which are put straight into a vase after picking.

The best way to select varieties is to see them growing and flowering. We will be glad to permit visitors to see the bulbs in flower during this Spring on Wednesday or Saturday afternoons or on other days by arrangement.

The special trial parcels on page 1 are recommended to those who require bulbs in quantity and who do not wish to make their own selection of the fine named varieties.

Varieties which do well in pots include: Aldergrove, Ballycastle, Bushmills, Charity May, Cantala, Cantabile, Carrickmannon, Cantatrice, Kingscourt, Golden Rapture, Golden Clarion, Newcastle, Rose Royale, Sweetness, Viking.
